Candlestick charts are one of the most popular components of technical analysis, enabling traders to interpret price information quickly and from just a few price bars. This article focuses on a daily chart, wherein each candlestick details a single day's trading. It has three basic features: The body, which represents the open-to-close range; The wick, or shadow, that indicates the intra-day high and low; The colour, which reveals the direction of market movement eAAA a green (or white) body indicates a price increase, while a red (or black) body shows a price decrease. Find out more about the basics of what a candlestick is. Over time, individual candlesticks form patterns that traders can use to recognise major support and resistance levels. There are a great many candlestick patterns that indicate an opportunity within a market eAAA some provide insight into the balance between buying and selling pressures, while others identify continuation patterns or market indecision. Before you start trading, it's eAAAs important to yourself yourself with the basics of candlestick patterns and how they can inform your decisions. The best way to learn to read candlestick patterns is to practise entering and exiting trades from the signals they give. You can develop your skills in a risk-free environment by opening an IG demo account, or if you feel confident enough to start trading, you can open a live account today. When using any candlestick pattern, it is important to remember that although they are great for quickly predicting trends, they should be used alongside other forms of technical analysis to confirm the overall trend. You can learn more about candlesticks and technical analysis with IG Academy's eAAAs online courses. Bullish patterns may form after a market downtrend, and signal a reversal of price movement. They are an indicator for traders to consider opening a long position to profit from any upward trajectory. The hammer candlestick pattern is formed of a short body with a long lower wick, and is found at the bottom of a downward trend. A hammer shows that although there were selling pressures during the day, ultimately a strong buying pressure drove the price back up. The colour of the body can vary, but green hammers indicate a stronger bull market than red hammers. A similarly bullish pattern is the inverted hammer. The only difference being that the upper wick is long, while the lower wick is short. It indicates a buying pressure, followed by a selling pressure that was not strong enough to drive the market price down. The inverse hammer suggests that buyers will soon have control of the market. The bullish engulfing pattern is formed of two candlesticks. The first candle is a short red body that is completely engulfed by a larger green candle. Though the second day opens lower than the first, the bullish market pushes the price up, culminating in an obvious win for buyers. The piercing line is also a two-stick pattern, made up of a long red opening candle, followed by a long green candle that opens above the red candle's midpoint, indicating a strong buy signal. The three white soldiers pattern is a three-candle pattern, where each candle is a long green candle, indicating a strong upward trend. The three black crows pattern is a three-candle pattern, where each candle is a long red candle, indicating a strong downward trend. The morning star pattern is a three-candle pattern, where the first candle is a long red candle, the second is a short red candle, and the third is a long green candle, indicating a strong upward trend. The evening star pattern is a three-candle pattern, where the first candle is a long green candle, the second is a short green candle, and the third is a long red candle, indicating a strong downward trend. The gravestone doji pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the top of the candle, indicating a strong bearish signal. The dragonfly doji pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the bottom of the candle, indicating a strong bullish signal. The on-neck line pattern is a two-candle pattern, where the second candle's open is at the first candle's high, indicating a strong upward trend. The inverted hammer pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the top of the candle, indicating a strong bearish signal. The hammer pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the bottom of the candle, indicating a strong bullish signal. The shooting star pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the top of the candle, indicating a strong bearish signal. The long upper shadow pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the upper shadow is significantly longer than the lower shadow, indicating a strong bearish signal. The tweezer top pattern is a two-candle pattern, where the two candles have very similar high prices, indicating a strong bearish signal. The hanging man pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the top of the candle, indicating a strong bearish signal. The long lower shadow pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the lower shadow is significantly longer than the upper shadow, indicating a strong bullish signal. The tweezer bottom pattern is a two-candle pattern, where the two candles have very similar low prices, indicating a strong bullish signal. The hammer pattern is a one-candle pattern, where the body is a single dot at the bottom of the candle, indicating a strong bullish signal.
